

BMHS receives start-up funding for career advocate position

Oct 22, 2014

The School District of Beloit announced its obtained start-up funding from Hendricks Family Foundation for a full-time career advocate who will work with students at Beloit Memorial High School (BMHS) to help create career pathways. The position would be funded for the first three years through the Foundation's grant.

The announcement was made during the REACH Advance Career Education roll-out event Tuesday evening at The Eclipse Center. Business people were invited to learn about the new position as well as efforts underway to brand the district's career and technical education program, said Career and Technical Education Director Ryan Rewey in an interview after the event.
